A few days ago there was a tre-mendous sensation at Dublin Castle. The telegraph wires announced the commission of a terrible crime. The Knight of Glin had been fired at in the precincts of his own town of Glin Here at last was a real, a true, a gen-uine, a fearful outrage. The telegraph wires rang with queries and dispatches, and the castle lawyers plunged deep and the castle lawyers plunged deep into coercion acts and proclamations. It need not be said that police inquiries were at once addressed to the supposed victim, the Knight of Glin. He was profoundly simused. A sportsman, a man of high respectability, was out rabbit shooting, and fired at and shot a rabbit. He was a little too near the road and a few grains of small shot whistled unpleasantly near the car on whistled unpleasantly near the car on which the knight was driving. There were apologies from the sportsman, and the genial Geraldine drove on to Glin Castle in his usual very excellent health and spirits. And thus dissolved into smoke the latest Dublin Castle bogus outrage!

Town Nearly Burned Down.

Belfast, Friday.—A most disastrous fire broke out close upon midnight last night in the Dublin road, Omagh, county Tyrone. When discovered in a building known as the Ulster hall, thad obtained a good hold. Bells and bugies sounded in the still night, and the townspeople flocked to the scene of the conflagration, which, fanned by a southerly breeze, gradually worked up the street. Notwithstanding the utmost efforts of soldiers, police, and the town fire brigade, the entire street of fine buildings was devastated, and the damage done is enormous.
